Speaker: Nick Tannaci

7:30 p.m. (New Time)

Nick Tannaci has been hybridizing and growing award-quality Paphiopedilums since 1973. Nick first started growing orchids upon graduation from UC Davis, when his Mother, an orchid grower since the '50s, gave him a Paphiopedilum fairreanum in bud. It bloomed and he was hooked. He started hybridizing and soon focused on Brachypetalums and Parvisepalums, breeding particularly for disease resistance in these difficult sections. Nick worked for a time with Terry Root of the Orchid Zone and has since started his own business, Nick Tannaci Orchids in Watsonville, CA. www.tannaci.com In the 34 years since he first started, Nick has become one of the foremost authorities on the challenging Brachys. He is so well respected for his prowess with them, that at the last Paphiopedilum Guild meeting he was christened with the title "Brachy Man". He has a wonderful sense of humor and is always on the lookout for a good joke or even a bad pun. He'll willingly share as many from his vast repertoire as you have time to listen to. He strongly believes in sharing his knowledge and encouraging growers through his talks to orchid societies.

President's Message

April 2007

I want to thank Loren Batchman for his program on cymbidiums with spots, dots and polka dots. The pictures were great and this was an exciting prelude to the future. The next few generations of breeding will bring some remarkable changes and in a couple of years the plants you saw will be out of the bottles and ready for us to grow. Also a special thank you to Loren for his generosity in providing a great plant table with every plant in bloom.

Shortly after I took office I was informed that our Society microphone we use for programs had disappeared. The first couple of programs without one were no fun and not everyone could hear. I am pleased to announce that a new microphone and extension cord has been generously donated by our Second Vice President, Susan Ochsner. Please join me in thanking Susan for her generosity!

The plants you brought for ribbon judging last month were a great selection of well grown orchids. Thank you for sharing and please continue to bring in your blooming orchids for all to see. We have a wide variety of growing methods in our Society and there is always something new to learn. I know you are tired of this by now, but please mark your Calendar now for a different location for the May Meeting. There was a conflict with the early date on May 21st due to the Holiday. We have been able to secure the facility at Stearns Park only a few blocks away. The address is 4520 E. 23rd Street.

Have a great month. I look forward to seeing you at the next meeting.

Board of Director's Meeting Highlights 4/7/07

The Board asked the Membership Chair to mail/email a final notice with a return envelop to 2006 members who have not yet paid their dues and let them know that their last SCOS newsletter was their March issue unless they respond with a renewal for 2007.

The Board reviewed the current rules of the Silent Auction which went into effect in September 2006. After listening to the experience with the current system, the Board voted to change back to the system in existence prior to September 2006 and ask that only plants that members want to DONATE to SCOS be brought to the Silent Auction Table. All proceeds will go towards Society; members will receive a special Opportunity Table ticket for each plant donated.

The Board accepted the resignation of Joan Bailey as 1st Vice President. Jim Miller recommended and the Board approved the appointment of Janell Schuck to fill the 1st Vice President position for the remainder of the year when the term expires.

The Board reviewed the Bylaws Committee's draft of the updated Bylaws and approved their adoption. The Board voted to have the updated Bylaws printed in this month's newsletter so it can be presented to the membership for adoption at the April Monthly meeting.

SCOS' Q & A Column

I presented our March meeting culture session, focused around a "Cattleya Culture Kit." Enough questions resulted that I will repeat the kit contents in this column, and briefly how I use each item.

Incidentally, American Orchid Society members were treated in the April 2007 Orchids to another article by A. A. Chadwick, this one describing six Spring-flowering Cattleyas. As I mentioned at the culture session, Chadwick and son have written a number of articles on Cattleyas (and Laelias) over the last few years, and they published a book on Cattleyas last year (2006). I like to read these articles for the inspiration they provide, the sort of thing that gets me through those difficult repotting sessions.

In my kit I have the following:

Light - I carry a light meter to the greenhouses of local growers to measure the light they give their Cattleyas, especially when I see plants growing well and looking healthy. Outdoor growing usually requires some kind of artificial shade (e.g., shade cloth) for Cattleyas, to bring sunlight closer to about 3,000 foot candles (slightly more in winter, less in summer). These orchids also prefer properly filtered light for about 6-8 hours a day, rather than higher light for shorter periods. I also use the light meter to measure the light levels I am giving my plants and I change the amount of light or move them to a different location if I find the light levels are far off the recommended number of foot candles.

Temperature - A thermometer that records the high and low temperatures registered since it was last reset is very useful. My latest one is electronic, and I can read the current, maximum, and minimum temperatures for two locations up to 6 feet apart. If I take readings and reset the high and low each 24 hours at the same time of day, I get a record of the high and low for each day. (Note: newspaper temperatures for your city are probably not the same as for your yard.)

Water and Humidity - Though I find limits to what I can do about low (or high) humidity outdoors, I do have a humidistat; this tells me the relative humidity (i.e., relative to the temperature). When the relative humidity is low, I spread water under the benches; when high, I lay off watering. I use tap water and a hose to water the Cattleyas weekly (on average, less when colder, more if it is very hot). I use a very fine Fogg-It nozzle to keep the humidity higher between watering. On a humid - or cold - day when the Fogg-It nozzle would be too much, I use a quart squirt bottle delivering a very fine spray of distilled water to moisten the rhizomes of selected plants. Cattleya dormaniana is one plant on which I try to use more distilled water; the same applies to the hadrolaelias (e.g., Laelia pumila, L.. dayana).

Fertilizer - I use a standard 30-10-10 fertilizer, half strength, during the summer, when plants are growing, because I grow mostly in fir bark, and as bark gets older a population of bacteria develops in the bark, consuming nitrogen, so growers need to supply extra nitrogen. (For mixed media, reduce nitrogen consistent with proportions of fir bark.) I use 20-20-20 during the winter, and the organisms turn that into something with less nitrogen, which is OK because the plants are cold and aren't doing much vegetative growing anyway.

Dividing - I carry an ample supply of new single-edged razor blades, and use one per plant, disposing of it when done with that plant. This helps prevent the spread of disease among plants. Sterile single use latex gloves, available in drug stores, also help in this regard. Otherwise, for cutting off dry rhizomes or bracts, garden shears (non-sterile) will do.

Potting - My current potting medium is a mix of fir bark, diatomite, and charcoal, all medium size. (I have used other mixes, now unavailable, or straight fir bark, but bark quality has declined.) I occasionally add medium perlite, if a plant requires more water retention. Smaller roots suggest potting L. lundii in fine bark and perlite. For stability, I use galvanized wire to secure bamboo plant stakes to the side of the plastic pots, and use twist ties or bonsai wire to hold the plant to the stake.

Identification - I write the name, my ID number, date potted, and origin (e.g., vendor) on a white plant label or tag. I also place a colored tag in the pot, to indicate the year potted (e.g., I am using green tags for 2007.) I can then quickly survey my plants and know which ones have been repotted in a given year. In addition, I use spread sheet software (Excel) on my computer to create a list of plants that includes the tag information plus price, when repotted, and number/quality of blooms.

Editor's Note: Thank you Russ Nichols. Russ is a SCOS Director and has volunteered to write this column on a monthly basis.
